1 INTRODUCTION

2 The Court requested that each side address “the ‘navigable waters of the United States’ as 3 that concept relates to the removal jurisdiction issue in this case.” See ECF No. 128 in Case No.
4 3:17-cv-06011-WHA. Plaintiffs understand the Court’s Order to refer to admiralty jurisdiction. As 5 set forth below, the People’s claims do not arise in admiralty. Even if they did arise in admiralty, 6 these would be in personam cases properly brought and kept in state court rather than in rem cases 7 where federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction. Finally, defendants waived admiralty jurisdiction 8 by failing to invoke it in their notices of removal.

9 ARGUMENT

10 I. The People’s Claims Do Not Arise in Admiralty.

11 A claim arises in admiralty only if three conditions are met. “The relevant tort or harm must 12 have (1) taken place on navigable water (or a vessel on navigable water having caused an injury on 13 land), (2) a potentially disruptive impact on maritime commerce, and (3) a substantial relationship to 14 traditional maritime activity.” Ali v. Rogers, 780 F.3d 1229, 1235 (9th Cir. 2015) (quotation marks 15 omitted); see also Jerome B. Grubart, Inc. v. Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co., 513 U.S. 527, 534 16 (1995).

17 A. No Tort or Harm Has Taken Place on Navigable Water, and No Vessel on 18 Navigable Water Has Caused an Injury on Land.

19 The first condition of admiralty jurisdiction, i.e., the “locality requirement,” has not been met.
20 The relevant situs for determining admiralty jurisdiction in tort cases is “the place where the injury 21 occurs.” Tobar v. United States, 639 F.3d 1191, 1197 (9th Cir. 2011) (internal quotation marks 22 omitted). And navigable waters include all places within the “ebb and flow of the tides,” Complaint 23 of Paradise Holdings, Inc., 795 F.2d 756, 759 (9th Cir. 1986), with the “gangplank” serving as the 24 “rough dividing line between the state and maritime regimes.” Victory Carriers, Inc. v. Law, 404 25 U.S. 202, 206–07 (1971); see also Ferguson v. Horizon Lines, LLC, 602 F. App’x 664, 665 (9th Cir.
26 2015) (assault “at an entry gate facility at the Port of Oakland” did not have maritime situs). The 27 classic maritime situs is the ship situated on navigable waters.

1 Here, the People allege injuries on lands threatened by extraordinary flooding and sea level 2 rise caused by global warming. These low-lying lands are not “navigable waters” because dry land 3 that could be inundated by unprecedented flooding is, by definition, far removed from the 4 “gangplank” and the normal “ebb and flow of the tides.” Although there are cases where admiralty 5 jurisdiction has been extended to shallow seawater where shipping is prohibited or unwise, see 6 Paradise Holdings, 795 F.2d at 759 (accident where boat drifted into shallow swimming area), the 7 People are unaware of any case where admiralty jurisdiction has been extended so far beyond any 8 ordinary understanding of “navigability”—i.e., to land above the high water mark, land that might be 9 a street or someone’s living room. Moreover, to the extent that sea level rise threatens to increase the 10 high water mark in the coming decades, that is harm that the People seek to abate by building 11 seawalls and other infrastructure (on land) to protect property from the rising waters.

12 The most similar case the People have identified is In re Katrina Canal Breaches Litigation, 13 324 F. App’x 370 (5th Cir. 2009), which implicitly rejects the idea that areas flooded by an 14 extraordinary storm are transformed into navigable waters for purposes of admiralty jurisdiction.
15 The Fifth Circuit assumed without deciding that tortious activity associated with flooding from 16 Hurricane Katrina occurred on navigable waters, because the canal where defendants tortiously 17 maintained the levee was arguably “navigable water.” Id. at 374. But there was no contention in 18 Katrina that the storm surge converted New Orleans itself into “navigable waters.” See also Jerome 19 B. Grubart, 513 U.S. at 535 (similar: tunnel flooded by nearby navigable waters was treated as 20 “land”; tort had marine situs exclusively because this flooding was caused by vessel on navigable 21 waters). Simply put, the Embarcadero and Jack London Square may be gravely threatened by global 22 warming, but they are not and hopefully never will be “navigable waters of the United States.”

23 Moreover, there is no plausible argument that any aspect of the People’s cases is related to 24 any vessel on navigable waters. Cf. Rodrigue v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 395 U.S. 352, 360 (1969)
25 (drilling platforms are not vessels, and not within admiralty jurisdiction). The locality requirement 26 has not been met and, on this ground alone, there is no admiralty jurisdiction.

1                   B. The Claims Bear No Substantial Relationship to Traditional Maritime Activity.

2                   The third condition, i.e., the “nexus requirement,” also has not been met. Defendants’ 3 tortious activity does not bear a “substantial relationship to traditional maritime activity.” The 4 inquiry is “whether a tortfeasor’s activity ... on navigable waters is so closely related to activity 5 traditionally subject to admiralty law that the reasons for applying special admiralty rules would 6 apply in the suit at hand.” Jerome B. Grubart, 513 U.S. at 539–40. For example, “[n]avigation of 7 boats in navigable waters” is a traditional maritime activity, and “storing them at a marina on 8 navigable waters is close enough,” but flying an airplane over the water or “swimming” is not a 9 traditional maritime activity. Id. at 540. Additionally, for the tort to have a “substantial relationship” 10 with the traditional maritime activity, this activity must be “a proximate cause of the incident.” Id. at 11 541.

12                   In In re Katrina Canal Breaches Litig., the plaintiffs sought admiralty jurisdiction over their 13 claims that defendants’ negligent dredging and maintenance of levees controlling navigable waters 14 resulted in flooding of New Orleans during Hurricane Katrina. 324 F. App’x at 372. The Fifth 15 Circuit assumed arguendo the location requirement was met, but found that the tortious activity 16 itself—the negligent maintenance of the levees—was done for local drainage purposes that “cannot 17 be said to be so substantially related to activity traditionally subject to admiralty law that imposing 18 admiralty jurisdiction would be warranted.” Id. at 380 (internal quotation marks and brackets 19 omitted). The fact that the dredging was done with the ancillary purpose of improving navigation on 20 navigable waters was insufficient to convert the activity to traditional maritime activity where the 21 primary purpose was local flood control.

22                   Here, the tortious activity is defendants’ promotion and production of fossil fuels at massive, 23 dangerous levels. These activities bear no relationship—much less a substantial relationship—to 24 traditional maritime activities. The only tortious activity in these actions that is even plausibly 25 related to a traditional maritime activity is defendants’ production of some fossil fuels on offshore 26 rigs. But this production is not a “traditional maritime activity.” Rather, it is an activity that can and 27 does occur everywhere, on land as well as water. See Exec. Jet Aviation v. City of Cleveland, 409 28 U.S. 249, 252 (1972) (rejecting admiralty jurisdiction over airplane crash at sea, because situs of

1 crash was “fortuitous”); Hufnagel v. Omega Serv. Indus., Inc., 182 F.3d 340, 352 (5th Cir. 1999) 2 (“Construction work on fixed offshore platforms bears no significant relation to traditional maritime 3 activity.”).

4 Moreover, even if this activity were a “traditional maritime activity,” it is not a proximate 5 cause of the People’s injuries. Defendants’ overall fossil fuel production occurs predominantly 6 outside navigable waters, as does all of their promotion of fossil fuels—an activity over and above
7 production that is essential to proving their liability for public nuisance. See Defs. Remand Opp., 8 ECF No. 92, at 30:6-7 & n.22 (production on U.S. Outer Continental Shelf has been at most less than 9 one-third of domestic production “in some years”); People v. Conagra Grocery Prod. Co., 227 Cal.
10 Rptr. 3d 499, 529 (6th Dist. 2017) (improper promotion in public nuisance case), reh’g denied (Dec.
11 6, 2017), review denied (Feb. 14, 2018). At bottom, defendants’ tortious activity is their production 12 and promotion of fossil fuels in massive, dangerous quantities. These are fundamentally land-based 13 activities that do “not require the special expertise of a court in admiralty as to navigation or water-14 based commerce.” Myhran v. Johns-Manville Corp., 741 F.2d 1119, 1122 (9th Cir. 1984); In re 15 Katrina, 324 F. App’x at 380 (similar).

16 There is no substantial connection between the defendants’ creation of a public nuisance and 17 any traditional maritime activity. For this reason, and because the tort did not occur on navigable 18 waters, there is no admiralty jurisdiction.

19 II. Admiralty Jurisdiction Is Not a Basis for Removal.

20 Even if these cases arose in admiralty, which they do not, there would still be no basis for 21 removal. The admiralty jurisdiction statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1333 (2018), provides that “district courts 22 shall have original jurisdiction, exclusive of the courts of the States, of . . . any civil case of admiralty 23 or maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases all other remedies to which they are otherwise 24 entitled” (emphasis added). This “saving to suitors” clause prohibits removal of all cases over which 25 there is concurrent (as opposed to exclusive) admiralty jurisdiction in the state courts – which is to 26 say that it prohibits removal of all in personam actions in admiralty, as described below.

1                   A. Exclusive Federal Jurisdiction Is Limited to Admiralty Cases In Rem.

2                   There is exclusive federal admiralty jurisdiction “only as to those maritime causes of action 3 begun and carried on as proceedings in rem, that is, where a vessel or thing is itself treated as the 4 offender and made the defendant by name or description in order to enforce a lien. It is this kind of 5 in rem proceeding which state courts cannot entertain.” Madruga v. Superior Court of State of Cal.
6 in & for San Diego Cnty., 346 U.S. 556, 560 (1954); see also Am. Dredging Co. v. Miller, 510 U.S.
7 443, 446–47 (1994) (“An in rem suit against a vessel is . . . distinctively an admiralty proceeding, 8 and is hence within the exclusive province of the federal courts.”).

9                   Here, there is no plausible basis to characterize the People’s claims as in rem proceedings.
10 The People do not treat vessels or things as offenders or defendants. Rather, the People contend that 11 defendants—the five largest investor-owned fossil fuel corporations in the world (as measured by 12 their production)—are violating California’s public nuisance law. Thus, even if these cases arose in 13 admiralty, there would be no exclusive federal jurisdiction.

14                   B. There Is No Right to Remove In Personam Admiralty Cases, Which Are Subject 15 to Concurrent Jurisdiction.

16                   For in personam cases like the People’s, the “saving to suitors” clause “leave[s] state courts 17 competent to adjudicate maritime causes of action in proceedings in personam, that is, where the 18 defendant is a person, not a ship or some other instrument of navigation.” Madruga, 346 U.S. at 19 560–61 (internal quotation marks omitted). “Therefore, a plaintiff with in personam maritime claims 20 has three choices: He may file suit in federal court under the federal court’s admiralty jurisdiction, in 21 federal court under diversity jurisdiction if the parties are diverse and the amount in controversy is 22 satisfied, or in state court.” Ghotra by Ghotra v. Bandila Shipping, Inc., 113 F.3d 1050, 1054 (9th 23 Cir. 1997).

24                   Here, the People exercised their choice to file these claims in state court, and it is well 25 established that this is a genuine choice. Federal courts have held that the “saving to suitors” 26 language in section 1333(1) forbids removal of all in personam admiralty and maritime claims, 27 except where there is some other basis for jurisdiction. For example, the Ninth Circuit has noted 28 “that saving clause claims brought in state court are not removable under 28 U.S.C. § 1441 absent

1 some other jurisdictional basis, such as diversity or federal question jurisdiction.” Morris v. Princess 2 Cruises, Inc., 236 F.3d 1061, 1069 (9th Cir. 2001) (citing Romero v. Int’l Terminal Operating Co., 3 358 U.S. 354, 371 (1959); Alleman v. Bunge Corp., 756 F.2d 344, 345-46 (5th Cir. 1984)). This rule 4 has been well established in the federal courts at least since Romero, which emphasized that the 5 “saving to suitors” clause was intended to preserve state courts’ concurrent jurisdiction over in 6 personam admiralty matters, and to preserve plaintiffs’ “historic option” to choose a state forum in 7 such cases, without being subject to removal. 358 U.S. at 371-72.

8 And this rule has been applied to reject admiralty-based removal in decisions by the Northern 9 District of California, apparently without exception. See GlobalSantaFe Drilling Co. v. Ins. Co. of 10 State of Pa., 2006 WL 13090, at *3-4 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 3, 2006); Little v. RMC Pac. Materials, Inc., 11 2005 WL 5095265, at *2 (N.D. Cal. July 11, 2005); Wehr v. Pheley, 2000 WL 236438, at *2 (N.D.
12 Cal. Feb. 16, 2000) (“Unlike a cause of action that arises under federal law, an admiralty case that 13 was properly filed in state court cannot be removed unless admiralty jurisdiction is exclusive.”) 14 (internal quotation marks omitted); Triton Container Int’l v. Institute of London Underwriters, 1998 15 WL 750941, at *3-4 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 1, 1998).

16 The application of this rule to the People’s lawsuits is straightforward. The People have filed 17 state-law statutory claims in state court, and section 1333(1) “saves” to the People their option to 18 select this forum, and forbids using admiralty jurisdiction as a basis of removal. This blackletter rule 19 is presumably why defendants, despite asserting seven highly creative bases for federal jurisdiction 20 in their exceptionally detailed notice of removal, decided not to make admiralty jurisdiction an 21 eighth.

22 In 2011, Congress revised section 1441(b) to clarify that complete diversity is required only 23 where diversity jurisdiction is the basis of removal. A handful of district courts in the Fifth Circuit 24 have held that this change authorizes admiralty-based removal of in personam claims filed in state 25 court. See, e.g., Ryan v. Hercules Offshore, 945 F. Supp. 2d 772, 778 (S.D. Tex. 2013); see also Lu 26 Junhong v. Boeing Co., 792 F.3d 805, 817–18 (7th Cir. 2015) (not reaching the issue because the 27 plaintiffs did not raise the savings clause). But the vast majority of courts to consider the question 28 have concluded that this change has no bearing on the non-removability of in personam admiralty

1 cases. See Langlois v. Kirby Inland Marine, LP, 139 F. Supp. 3d 804, 809-10 (M.D. La. 2015)
2 (collecting cases). For good reason: section 1441(a) continues to provide an exception precluding 3 removal of any case over which the district courts have original jurisdiction where Congress has 4 expressly provided otherwise. See 28 U.S.C. § 1441(a) (“Except as otherwise expressly provided by 5 Act of Congress . . .”). And under Romero the savings clause of section 1333(1) is just such an 6 exception, since “it was the unquestioned aim of the saving clause of 1789 to preserve” concurrent 7 state court jurisdiction over admiralty matters, as well as the “historic option of a maritime suitor 8 pursuing a common-law remedy to select his forum.” 358 U.S. at 371-72.

9         The majority rule holding that the 2011 amendments did not alter the non-removability of in 10 personam admiralty cases includes, as far as the People are aware, every court in the Ninth Circuit 11 that has considered the question. See, e.g., Moreno v. Ross Island Sand & Gravel Co., 2015 WL 12 5604443, at *19 n.13 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 23, 2015) (“District courts in this circuit agree with this 13 majority view” that maritime cases are not removable); see also Stark v. Markel Am. Ins. Co., 2017 14 WL 5151300, at *3 (W.D. Wash. Nov. 7, 2017); Coronel v. AK Victory, 1 F. Supp. 3d 1175 (W.D.
15 Wash. 2014); Bartman v. Burrece, 2014 WL 4096226, at *3 (D. Alaska Aug. 18, 2014); accord 16 Forde v. Hornblower New York, LLC, 243 F. Supp. 3d 461, 468 (S.D.N.Y. 2017) (“Because 17 Defendants’ argument for removal contradicts the saving to suitors clause, as interpreted by the 18 Supreme Court and Second Circuit, the Court cannot conclude that jurisdiction exists in this case 19 even given the 2011 amendment to § 1441.”); Glazer v. Honeywell Int’l Inc., 2017 WL 1943953, at 20 *6 (D.N.J. May 10, 2017) (“The Court therefore concludes that the amendment to Section 1441(b)
21 did not disturb the settled principle that Section 1331(1)’s savings-to-suitors clause allows a plaintiff 22 to prevent removal where the only basis for federal jurisdiction is admiralty.”); Brown v. Porter, 149 23 F. Supp. 3d 963 (N.D. Ill. 2016) (rejecting admiralty-based removal, and pointing out that Seventh 24 Circuit’s decision in Lu Junhong did not decide the issue). This is consistent with the view of 25 distinguished admiralty commentators, who regard the minority view as an “error.” See, e.g., Force 26 & Norris, The Law of Maritime Personal Injuries § 1:9 (5th ed. 2017) (“The vast majority of courts 27 have concluded that amendments to the Removal statute have not changed the rule that cases that are 28 solely within 28 U.S.C.A. § 1333 are not removable . . . It is submitted that these [minority view]

1 decisions may be in error.”). In fact, the district judge who decided Ryan, the leading case for the 2 minority view, has now become persuaded that he was wrong, and has held that maritime cases 3 cannot be removed to federal court. See Sanders v. Cambrian Consultants, 132 F. Supp. 3d 853, 858 4 (S.D. Tex. 2015).

5 The foregoing authorities establish that admiralty removal is improper. As the Ninth Circuit 6 has emphasized, “[f]ederal jurisdiction must be rejected if there is any doubt as to the right of 7 removal in the first instance.” Gaus v. Miles, Inc., 980 F.2d 564, 566 (9th Cir. 1992). In fact, in this 8 case, where the People have filed a parens patriae case in their own courts, there must be a “clear 9 rule” that “demands” removal. Nevada v. Bank of Am. Corp., 672 F.3d 661, 676 (9th Cir. 2012).
10 Defendants cannot meet this high standard.

11 III. Defendants Waived Admiralty Jurisdiction as a Basis for Removal Jurisdiction.

12 Even if these were admiralty cases, and even if there were an appropriate basis to remove 13 them, defendants have waived their right to seek removal at this time. A defendant seeking to 14 remove a case to federal court must do so within thirty days of being served with the complaint.
15 ARCO Env'tl. Remediation, L.L.C. v. Dep't of Health & Env'tl. Quality of Montana, 213 F.3d 1108, 16 1117 (9th Cir. 2000); 28 U.S.C. § 1446(b). The notice of removal must contain a “statement of the 17 grounds for removal.” 28 U.S.C. § 1446(a). On October 20, 2017, Defendants filed their notices of 18 removal (together, “NOR”). Their detailed, 32-page NOR listed seven grounds for removal but did 19 not invoke admiralty jurisdiction as a basis for removal; it does not so much as cite 28 U.S.C. § 20 1333.

21 Defendants’ failure to invoke admiralty jurisdiction in the NOR constitutes waiver. The 22 “Notice of Removal cannot be amended to add a separate basis for removal jurisdiction after the 23 thirty day period.” ARCO, 213 F.3d at 1117 (quotation marks omitted); accord O’Halloran v. Univ.
24 of Washington, 856 F.2d 1375, 1381 (9th Cir. 1988) (same); SWC Inc. v. Elite Promo Inc., 234 F.
25 Supp. 3d 1018, 1025 (N.D. Cal. 2017) (same). Given that defendants removed the case over three 26 months ago, there is no dispute that the 30-day period to amend the NOR with a new ground for 27 removal expired long ago. Courts routinely reject attempts by defendants to establish removal 28 jurisdiction on grounds not raised in the notice of removal. See, e.g., Marsoobian v. Transamerica

1 Life Ins. Co., 2016 WL 7173737, at *7 (E.D. Cal. Dec. 9, 2016) (remanding case: “The Court will 2 not consider this untimely theory of jurisdiction.”); Carr v. Nat’l Ass’n of Forensic Counselors, Inc., 3 2014 WL 7384718, at *4 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 29, 2014) (remanding case and refusing to consider 4 “entirely new basis for removal jurisdiction” not found in notice of removal); Rader v. Sun Life 5 Assur. Co. of Canada, 941 F. Supp. 2d 1191, 1196 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (“The notice of removal cannot 6 be amended to add new bases for removal after the thirty day removal period has run, nor can a 7 defendant present new grounds for removal for the first time in opposition to a motion for remand.”); 8 Sonoma Falls Developers, LLC v. Nevada Gold & Casinos, Inc., 272 F. Supp. 2d 919, 925 (N.D.
 9 Cal. 2003) (ordering remand: “The court is unable to consider whether federal question jurisdiction 10 might have provided a valid basis for removal because none of the defendants raised this issue in 11 their notice of removal, which predicates removal jurisdiction solely on complete diversity.”). Any 12 attempt at this late juncture to add a new ground for removal would be outside the thirty-day time 13 limit in 28 U.S.C. § 1446(b), which is “mandatory and a timely objection to a late petition will defeat 14 removal.” Smith v. Mylan, Inc., 761 F.3d 1042, 1045 (9th Cir. 2014) (quotation omitted).

15 Defendants have waived admiralty jurisdiction as a basis for removal.

16 CONCLUSION

17 The People’s claims do not arise in admiralty. And even if they did, the claims are in 18 personam, properly brought and kept in state court. Moreover, defendants have waived their right to 19 seek removal jurisdiction. The People’s remand motion should be granted.
