REPLYI. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs are walking quite the tight rope. On the one hand they ask this Court to take the extraordinary step of altering its order and judgment based on their concern that the Supreme Court's stay in Louisiana v. American Rivers, 142 S. Ct. 1347 (2022), indicates that they may have led the Court into error (or that at least a similar stay could be warranted in this case). See ECF 180 at 6.¹ Plaintiffs do not put it quite that way, of course; they claim that it is "Intervenors' interpretation of the legal effect of the Supreme Court's unexplained order [that] casts uncertainty over this case." Id. (emphasis added). But if there were not merit to "Intervenors' interpretation," why file the Rule 59(e) motion?

On the other hand, Plaintiffs say there is nothing to worry about—the Court's pre-merits vacatur was "well-founded," ECF 181 at 7, the Defendant Intervenors cannot show that the order "was erroneous," id., and as for the Supreme Court's stay order, nothing at all can be gleaned except "questions about what the Supreme Court may one day decide," id. at 13. Not only that, Plaintiffs say, but only federal agencies can seek appellate review of a court's pre-merits vacatur, meaning that the only the way the Supreme Court could even give that future guidance is if the federal government happens to appeal. See id. at 11-12.

For their part, the Federal Defendants do not defend the Court's order. They agree that "the Court erred in vacating" the challenged regulations without considering their legality, ECF 182 at 11-12, and they emphasize that the government "did not confess error on any aspect of the 2019 ESA Rules," id. at 12 n.4. Nevertheless, they too argue that the Court's error is unreviewable unless they (and only they) decide to appeal. Id. at 12. They also argue that the Defendant Intervenors have neither established standing to appeal nor demonstrated harm from the Court's judgment. Id. at 13-14.

¹ The Defendant-Intervenors are filing an identical joint reply in each of the three related cases: Center for Biological Diversity v. Haaland, No. 19-cv-05206 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 21, 2019); California v. Haaland, No. 19-cv-06013 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 25, 2019); and Animal Legal Defense Fund v. Haaland, No. 19-cv-06812 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 21, 2019). Except where otherwise noted, reference will be made to the ECF numbers in the lowest-numbered case: Center for Biological Diversity.

1 These arguments fail. First, the Supreme Court’s order in American Rivers is in fact quite 2 instructive. Plaintiffs and the Federal Defendants recognize that the primary considerations for any
 3 court to grant a stay are likelihood of success on the merits and injury absent a stay. ECF 182 at 4 11; ECF 181 at 10-11. And for the Supreme Court to grant “a stay pending the filing and 5 disposition of a petition for a writ of certiorari, an applicant must show ... a fair prospect that a
 6 majority of the Court will vote to reverse the judgment below” and “a likelihood that irreparable
 7 harm will result from the denial of a stay.” Hollingsworth v. Perry, 558 U.S. 183, 190 (2010)
 8 (emphasis added). That the Supreme Court granted a stay in American Rivers, then, means that the 9 intervenors in that case met these requirements. It is thus notable that the Supreme Court granted
 10 the stay even though the other parties in that case had also argued that the intervenors could not 11 seek review of a district court’s pre-merits vacatur and that the intervenors would not be harmed.
 12 By granting the stay in the face of these arguments, the Supreme Court strongly “signal[ed] its 13 view of the merits.” American Rivers, 142 S. Ct. at 1349 (Kagan, J., dissenting). This Court should 14 heed that signal. Cf. Calvary Chapel Dayton Valley v. Sisolak, 982 F.3d 1228, 1232-33 (9th Cir.
 15 2020).

16 Second, the Defendant Intervenors can seek appellate review in this case because “review 17 would, as a practical matter, be foreclosed if an immediate appeal were unavailable.” Alsea Valley
 18 All. v. Dep’t of Com., 358 F.3d 1181, 1184 (9th Cir. 2004). The question on appeal is whether a 19 district court has the authority to vacate agency action when the action has not been “found” to be 20 “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law,” “without 21 observance of procedure required by,” or “in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or 22 limitations, or short of statutory right.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2). That question will not be—cannot be—23 addressed by the agencies on remand.

24 Third, the Defendant Intervenors have standing to appeal and will be irreparably harmed
 25 without a stay. The Federal Defendants recognize that their standing arguments are the same ones
 26 they lodged against Plaintiffs, “albeit conversely.” ECF 182 at 13. The Court rejected them, finding 27 that the state and organizational plaintiffs had sufficiently alleged that they are indeed affected by the current regulations. E.g., California, ECF 98 at 8-9. The same is true here, “albeit conversely”: the Defendant Intervenors have all shown that they will be significantly harmed if the current regulations are vacated. See, e.g., ECF 171 at 23-28. They will be subject once again to the unlawful 2016 regulations that brought them significant real-world harm and which they fought to replace. They will suffer from regulatory whiplash from being governed by the 2019 rules, then the 2016 rules, and then the 2023 (or 2024) rules in a short period. Their procedural right to comment on a rule’s rescission will be abolished, and with it any hope that the Services will protect their concrete interests by not rescinding the rule. Cf. Summers v. Earth Island Inst., 555 U.S. 488, 497-98 (2009). And they will likely forever lose their right to appellate review because new regulations would moot their appeal. That is enough to seek (and obtain) a stay from this Court, and to ask for relief on appeal. See West Virginia v. EPA, 142 S. Ct 2587, 2606 (2022).
 28

The Defendant Intervenors respectfully ask the Court to stay the vacatur order pending appeal.

II. ARGUMENT

A. The Defendant Intervenors Are Likely to Succeed on the Merits of Their Appeals.

As they explained in their stay motion, the Defendant Intervenors are likely to succeed on the merits of their appeals. See ECF 171 at 17-23. Courts cannot “set aside agency action” under the APA without first making a merits determination, and that truth infects any attempt to apply Allied-Signal to a rule that has not been found unlawful because the test assumes the very thing in dispute: that the rule in question is unlawful.

Plaintiffs offer three rejoinders: (1) that nothing can be learned from the Supreme Court’s action in American Rivers, (2) that the Court has broad “equitable authority” to grant relief outside of the APA, and (3) that the Court correctly applied Allied-Signal. ECF 181 at 12-23. None are persuasive.

1. The American Rivers Stay is Instructive.

As this Court recognized when it relied on the district court’s pre-merits vacatur order in American Rivers, ECF 168 at 6-7, the relevant issues in that case and this one are strikingly similar.

1 In both cases, plaintiffs challenged environmental regulations. See In re Clean Water Act
 2 Rulemaking, 568 F. Supp. 3d 1013, 1020 (N.D. Cal. 2021), appeal filed, No. 21-1691 (9th Cir.
 3 Nov. 22, 2021), stay granted, Louisiana v. Am. Rivers, 142 S. Ct. 1347 (2022). In both cases, 4 before full briefing and a merits determination could occur, the federal defendants moved to 5 remand without vacatur, while the plaintiffs moved for remand with vacatur. Id. at 1020-21. In 6 both cases, the district courts granted plaintiffs the full relief they sought, setting aside final agency
 7 action without first determining whether the action was unlawful. Id. at 1028.

8 When the intervenors in American Rivers sought a stay pending appeal, the plaintiffs and 9 the federal government in that case made similar arguments, too. Before the Supreme Court, for 10 instance, the plaintiffs there—many of whom are plaintiffs here—argued that pre-merits vacatur 11 is consistent with the “courts’ traditional understanding of equitable authority over administrative 12 actions.” See Resp. to App. for Stay Pending Appeal at 13, Louisiana v. Am Rivers, No. 21A539
 13 (U.S. Mar. 28, 2022) [Am. Rivers Ps’ Resp.]. They even relied on the same sentence from the 14 same case that Plaintiffs do here: United States v. Morgan, 307 U.S. 183, 191 (1939), decided 15 before the APA was even enacted. Compare Am. Rivers Resp. 13 with ECF 181 at 16. So it went 16 for the rest of their response—the same cases discussed, the same arguments made, the same or 17 similar phrasing used. Compare, e.g., Am. Rivers Ps’ Resp. 12 (“A court must have the power to 18 vacate a rule when granting an agency’s request for remand because otherwise the rule’s 19 challengers are left subject to a rule they claim is invalid.” (citing Chlorine Chemistry Council v.
 20 EPA, 206 F.3d 1286, 1288 (D.C. Cir. 2000)); id. at 15 (“The APA’s sovereign immunity waiver
 21 provision is no more helpful to Applicants than its judicial review provision.”); and id. at 14
 22 (“Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 435 U.S. 519 (1978), does
 23 not counsel otherwise or control.”), with ECF 181 at 15 (“Without equitable authority to vacate a 24 challenged rule on voluntary remand, a plaintiff would be unfairly precluded from litigating a 25 rule—which it asserts is legally invalid and causing ongoing harm—for an indefinite period of 26 time.” (citing Chlorine Chemistry Council, 206 F.3d at 1288)); id. at 17 (“The APA’s sovereign immunity waiver provision likewise is not helpful to Intervenor.”); and id. at 16 n.4 (“Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. ... does not dictate a different result....”).
 27

The same is true for the federal government’s arguments. There, as here, the federal defendants agreed “that the district court lacked authority to vacate the [challenged] Rule[s] without first determine that the Rule[s] w[ere] invalid.” Mem. for Fed. Resp. at 13, Louisiana v. Am. Rivers, No. 21A539 (U.S. Mar. 28, 2022) [“Am. Rivers Fed. Resp.”]; see ECF at 6. They nevertheless opposed the intervenors’ stay application because, among other reasons, the government claimed that under Ninth Circuit precedent the remand order was not final as to anyone but the government. Am. Rivers Fed. Resp. 20 (citing Alsea Valley, 358 F.3d at 1184); see ECF 182 at 12. The plaintiffs also made that argument, there and here. See Am. Rivers Ps’ Resp. 11; ECF 181 at 11-12. And they—the plaintiffs and the federal defendants—also argued that the intervenors had not demonstrated that they would suffer harm absent a stay because their alleged harms were “too speculative.” Am. Rivers Fed. Resp. 17; Am. Rivers Ps’ Resp. 20-21; ECF 181 23; ECF 182 14. So it goes here.

The point here is not to fault the other parties and their counsel for recycling their briefing. The point is that their recycling makes perfect sense: the issues and arguments in the two cases are nearly identical, and they were presented to and considered by the Supreme Court in American Rivers. That is important because Plaintiffs paint the Supreme Court’s stay order as “unusual,” entered “without explanation” and “without full briefing and argument”—an enigma about which nothing can be known save for some “questions about what the Supreme Court may one day decide.” ECF 181 at 13 (citations omitted). For this to be true, though, Plaintiffs’ primary argument must be false: that the Defendant Intervenor “are not entitled to a stay because they have failed to make a strong showing of success on the merits of their appeal.” ECF 181 at 11. Either the same standard governs both cases—in which case we can tell from the Supreme Court’s decision that it determined that the intervenors in American Rivers are likely to succeed on the merits of their appeal—or Plaintiffs have enunciated the wrong standard and the Defendant Intervenor here need not show a likelihood of success. Of course, the former is true. See ECF 181 at 10 (citing Nken v.

1 Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 427 (2009); Washington v. Trump, 847 F.3d 1151, 1164 (9th Cir. 2017)).
 2 The American Rivers stay thus “signal[ed]” the Court’s “view of the merits.” 142 S. Ct. at 1349
 3 (Kagan, J., dissenting). Because the merits of the two cases are so similar, the Defendant
 4 Intervenor in this case are entitled to a stay, too.

5 2. Plaintiffs’ Unbounded View of the Court’s Equitable Authority to Act 6 Outside the APA is Wrong.

7 In the APA, Congress authorized district courts to “hold unlawful and set aside agency
 8 action” when the action is “found to be” “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise 9 not in accordance with the law,” “in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or 10 short of statutory right,” or “without observance of procedure required by law.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2).
 11 Courts cannot “set aside agency action” consistent with these statutory requirements unless they 12 find the agency action unlawful.

13 Plaintiffs do not necessarily disagree with that proposition. Instead, they argue that the 14 APA’s limitation does not matter because courts have “inherent equitable authority” to act outside
 15 those statutory bounds. See ECF 181 at 14-18. Relying on the Supreme Court’s pre-APA decision 16 in Morgan, Plaintiffs assert that “[a] court reviewing agency action ‘sits as a court of equity’ and 17 may shape relief ‘in conformity to equitable principles.’” ECF 181 at 16 (quoting Morgan, 307 18 U.S. at 191). Doing equity here, they conclude, means pre-merits vacatur. Id.

19 There are at least two problems with this reasoning. First, “equity” is not a free-floating 20 get-out-of-jail-free card that allows courts to sidestep the law whenever they think it best. Rather,
 21 the federal courts’ traditional equitable discretion is tethered to “the jurisdiction in equity exercised
 22 by the High Court of Chancery in England at the time of the adoption of the Constitution and the 23 enactment of the original Judiciary Act, 1789.” Grupo Mexicano de Desarrollo S.A. v. All. Bond
 24 Fund, Inc., 527 U.S. 308, 318 (1999) (citation omitted). So the question is “whether the relief 25 [Plaintiffs] requested here”—pre-merits vacatur—“was traditionally accorded by courts of 26 equity.” Id. at 319. The answer is no: Plaintiffs have not pointed to a historical analog for the novel
 27 “equitable” remedy they asked this Court to craft.
 28

1 Second, as Plaintiffs recognize, traditional equitable jurisdiction is limited when, “by a
 2 necessary and inescapable inference,” a statute “restricts the court’s jurisdiction in equity.” ECF
 3 181 at 16 (quoting Porter v. Warner Holding Co., 328 U.S. 395, 398 (1946)). The APA provides 4 just such an inference. By setting out precise paths by which courts may “set aside agency
 5 action”—by first “hold[ing]” that action “unlawful,” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)—Congress necessarily 6 closed off other avenues. Any other reading would make the procedure Congress mandated 7 superfluous. It would also have no logical ending point. If “equity” allows a court to ignore the 8 APA’s requirement that it “review the whole record or those parts of it cited by a party” before 9 setting agency action aside, can it also ignore the record when it holds agency action unlawful?
 10 Can it “compel agency action [i]lawfully withheld,” id. § 706(1), if the court determines it would 11 be “equitable” to do so? And if courts have the inherent equitable authority to set aside agency
 12 action without finding it unlawful, must they wait for a lawsuit to do so, or can they scan the pages
 13 of the Federal Register and vacate rules that (say) a new administration begins to have “substantial 14 concerns” about? These questions sound absurd, and they are, but it is not at all apparent what line 15 of reasoning separates them from the question in this case: whether a court can rely on its 16 “equitable” authority to grant relief the APA does not contemplate.

17 Plaintiffs also raise the concern that, if pre-merits “vacatur is not available, agencies may 18 withdraw illegal actions ... from judicial review, without the accountability of confessing error,
 19 and leave parties challenging that action—like Plaintiffs here—without any meaningful remedy.”
 20 ECF 181 at 18. This is not so much an argument for pre-merits vacatur as it is an argument against 21 remand without vacatur when “the agency’s request is frivolous or in bad faith,” SKF USA Inc. v.
 22 United States, 254 F.3d 1022, 1029 (Fed. Cir. 2001)—or when there are other reasons to deny an 23 agency’s request for remand, see Wagner v. Principi, 370 F.3d 1089, 1092-97 (Fed. Cir. 2004)
 24 (denying an agency motion for remand and instead reaching the merits of a statutory question).
 25 Plaintiffs could have opposed the Federal Defendants’ remand motion in its entirety and argued 26 that only a merits determination would give them a meaningful (and lawfully obtained) remedy.

1 Or they could have sought a preliminary injunction to enjoin enforcement of the regulations. That 2 they did neither does not mean “equity” must tread a new path.

3 3. The Court Misapplied Allied-Signal.

4 Because the application of Allied-Signal to this case has already been so thoroughly
 5 briefed, the Defendant Intervenor offer here only a couple of points in reply to Plaintiffs’ latest 6 arguments.

7 One, Plaintiffs continue to emphasize that “the Services express multiple ‘substantial 8 concerns’” with certain provisions of the 2019 Rules. ECF 181 at 20-21. And the Services’
 9 “concerns” continue to be irrelevant. For one, as the Federal Defendants note in their response, 10 while they “expressed substantial concerns,” the Services “did not confess error on any aspect of 11 the 2019 ESA Rules.” ECF 182 at 12 n.4. For another, even if the Federal Defendants 12 had confessed error, that would also not justify a pre-merits vacatur under the first step of Allied-
 13 Signal. See Mexichem Specialty Resins, Inc. v. EPA, 787 F.3d 544, 557 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (“EPA’s
 14 consent is not alone a sufficient basis for us to stay or vacate a rule.”); see also Supp. Br. for State 15 Respondent-Intervenor States of Cal. et al., at 5 n.5, North Dakota v. EPA, No. 15-1456 (D.C.
 16 Cir. May 15, 2017) (“Even if EPA disclaims its previous positions, vacatur is not permissible.”).

17 Two, Plaintiffs note that, “[i]n particular, the Services expressed multiple ‘substantial
 18 concerns’ with the Blanket 4(d) Rule Repeal that eliminated the so-called ‘blanket’ protections for 19 species listed as threatened.” ECF 181 at 20. And they claim that the rule could not be adopted
 20 again on remand because of its “multiple legal infirmities.” Id. at 21. Conspicuously left out of this
 21 analysis, though, is any mention that the Ninth Circuit has already recognized that a non-blanket 22 4(d) rule is permissible. See Trout Unlimited v. Lohn, 559 F.3d 946, 962 (9th Cir. 2002). The 23 Service thus could retain the 2019 4(d) rule on remand, and it is very likely required to do so. See,
 24 e.g., ECF 152 at 21-23.

25 B. The Defendant Intervenor Can Appeal This Court’s Order.

26 Next, while Plaintiffs emphasize that pre-merits vacatur “prevents ... deprivation of 27 Plaintiffs’ day in court,” ECF 181 at 11, they show remarkably little concern for anyone else’s 28

1 adjudicative rights. Relying on the Ninth Circuit’s decision in Alsea Valley, 358 F.3d at 1184-86,
 2 both they and the Federal Defendants claim that the Defendant Intervenor cannot appeal the 3 Court’s final judgment because no one can appeal that judgment except for the Services. Id.; see
 4 ECF 182 at 12. Alsea Valley does not impose such a harsh and unfair rule.

5 In the Ninth Circuit, “[a] remand order will be considered ‘final’”—and thus appealable—
 6 “‘where (1) the district court conclusively resolves a separable legal issue, (2) the remand order
 7 forces the agency to apply a potentially erroneous rule which may result in a wasted proceeding,
 8 and (3) review would, as a practical matter, be foreclosed if an immediate appeal were 9 unavailable.’” Alsea Valley, 358 F.3d at 1184 (quoting Collard v. U.S. Dep’t of Interior, 154 F.3d
 10 933, 935 (9th Cir. 1998)). Such is the case here.

11 First, the Court conclusively resolved whether it possesses the equitable authority to vacate
 12 agency regulations without an adjudication of the merits. That issue is the whole case at this point.
 13 See ECF 169 (entering judgment and closing case). And that issue is clearly “separable” from the 14 underlying merits, which the Court never resolved and will never resolve in this case.

15 Second, the vacatur “order forces the [Services] to apply a potentially erroneous rule which 16 may result in a wasted proceeding,” Alsea Valley, 358 F.3d at 1184 (citation omitted), because it 17 resurrects the pre-2019 blanket 4(d) rule and rules for designating unoccupied critical habitat and 18 delisting species. As the Defendant Intervenor has argued throughout this litigation, much of 19 this regulatory regime was unlawful. E.g., ECF 171 at 11-14; ECF 159 at 9-20; ECF 47 at 11-19.
 20 That is why, for instance, the Private Landowner Intervenor filed a rulemaking petition with FWS
 21 urging repeal of the blanket 4(d) rule, see ECF 152-1 at ¶ 3, and many of the State Intervenor
 22 challenged the 2016 rules in court, see Alabama ex rel. Steven T. Marshall v. National Marine
 23 Fisheries Service, No. 1:16-cv-00593-CG-MU (S.D. Ala. Compl. Filed Nov. 29, 2016), ECF 1.

24 Third, “review would, as a practical matter, be foreclosed if an immediate appeal were 25 unavailable.” Alsea Valley, 358 F.3d at 1184 (citation omitted). The premise of Alsea Valley is that 26 remand is not final to non-agency litigants because they may “influence the ultimate shape of the 27 Service rule during the public participation phase of the rulemaking process,” and then can 28

1 challenge any resulting rule as needed. 358 F.3d at 1184-85. Not so here. On remand, the Services
 2 will not decide—indeed, cannot decide—whether a district court has the authority to enter a pre-
 3 merits vacatur. And given the Court’s vacatur, there need not even be any further process for the 4 Services to rescind the challenged rules because they have already been whisked away. That means
 5 that any APA process in which the Defendant Intervenors could have advocated for retention of 6 the rules has been rendered superfluous. Unless they are able to appeal this Court’s order, the 7 Defendant Intervenors’ right to appellate review will be forever foreclosed.

8 That cannot be the case. The Ninth Circuit gives the finality requirement “a practical rather 9 than a technical construction.” Montes v. United States, 37 F.3d 1347, 1350 (9th Cir. 1994).
 10 Finality exists whenever there “is a full adjudication of the issues.” Patel v. Del Taco, Inc., 446
 11 F.3d 996, 1000 (9th Cir. 2006). Thus, in Crow Indian Tribe v. United States, 965 F.3d 662, 670,
 12 675-77 (9th Cir. 2020), the Court of Appeals recognized that the Alsea Valley rule did not prevent 13 the intervenors in that case from seeking appellate review of a district court’s order. That order
 14 had vacated and remanded an FWS rule concerning the delisting of certain grizzly bear populations
 15 because (among other reasons) FWS had failed to include a “recalibration of any new grizzly 16 population estimator” in its rule. The Ninth Circuit explained that, in Alsea Valley, it had held that 17 “the remand order was not final as to the private party intervenors ... because their positions would 18 be taken into account in the remand proceeding.” Id. at 676. “The same is not the case here,” the 19 Court held, “because the district court has issued a definitive ruling, contrary to the Intervenors’
 20 position, concluding that the FWS’s failure to include a commitment to recalibration in the 2017
 21 Rule was arbitrary and capricious.” Id. The Court continued: “Indeed, the FWS removed a
 22 commitment to recalibration from the 2017 Rule at the insistence of the Intervenors. The district
 23 court has now ordered the FWS to include it in any new rulemaking. An appeal is the only way
 24 the Intervenors’ objections can be considered. We thus have jurisdiction to consider their appeal.”
 25 Id. (citations omitted).

26 So too here: “An appeal is the only way the Intervenors’ objections can be considered.”
 27 And that makes sense, given the “practical” construction to finality the Ninth Circuit applies. Were 28

1 it otherwise, Alsea Valley could be misconstrued to immunize from review any scenario where a
 2 new administration attains the windfall of a pre-merits vacatur of its predecessor's actions. That 3 cannot be the rule, and thankfully is not.

4 C. The Defendant Intervenors Have Standing to Appeal, and a Stay is Needed to 5 Prevent Irreparable Harm Pending Their Appeal.

6 As explained in their motion, a stay is needed to prevent irreparable harm. See ECF 171 at 7 23-28. That was true of the intervenors in American Rivers, and it is true of the Defendant
 8 Intervenors here.

9 Both the Plaintiffs and Federal Defendants challenge this aspect of the Defendant
 10 Intervenors' motion, with the Federal Defendants going so far as to claim (in a single, conclusory 11 paragraph) that the Defendant Intervenors lack standing to appeal because they have not shown 12 injury in fact. ECF 182 at 13-14; see ECF 181 at 23-26. These claims blink reality.

13 "In considering a litigant's standing to appeal, the question is whether it has experienced 14 an injury 'fairly traceable to the judgment below.'" West Virginia, 142 S. Ct. at 2606 (quoting
 15 Food Marketing Inst. v. Argus Leader Media, 139 S. Ct. 2356, 2362 (2019)). "If so, and a favorable
 16 ruling from the appellate court would redress that injury, then the appellant has a cognizable Article 17 III stake." Id. (cleaned up and citation omitted).

18 Here, the Court vacated the 2019 rules that the Defendant Intervenors fought for and relied 19 on. In so doing, the Court resurrected the pre-2019 rules. See Paul v. Daniels, 413 F.3d 999, 1008
 20 (9th Cir. 2005) ("The effect of invalidating an agency rule is to reinstate the rule previously in 21 force."). Yet those rules were harmful to the Defendant Intervenors, and resurrecting them is 22 harmful to the Defendant Intervenors. See ECF 171 at 23-28. That claim is not speculative: We 23 know what those rules are and how they interfered with States' ability to protect their natural
 24 resources as they saw fit. E.g., ECF 47 at 11-13; see also Crow Indian Tribe, 965 F.3d at 676-77 25 (recognizing states' standing to appeal because "states have an interest in conservation and 26 protection of wild animals" (quoting Hughes v. Oklahoma, 441 U.S. 322, 337 (1979))). We know
 27 that the 2019 Section 4 and Section 4(d) rules provided regulatory relief to Washington
 28 Cattlemen's Association's membership by reducing burdensome costs associated with ESA regulation and incentivizing those whose properties are impacted by the presence of endangered species to care for the species by tying species improvement to less regulation. See, e.g., ECF 41-4 ¶¶ 5-7, 10, 13. We know that reimposing the pre-2019 section 7 regime will reduce transparency, promote inefficiency, and re-impose burdensome and time-consuming requirements that are often barriers to members of the Industry Intervenors obtaining federal permits, licenses, leases, or contracts that are necessary for their operations. See Meadows/API Decl. at ¶ 7 (ECF 36-5); Ward/NAHB Decl. at ¶ 9 (ECF 36-8); Yates/AFBF Decl. at ¶ 8 (ECF 36-3); Joseph/AFRC Decl. at ¶ 5 (ECF 36-4); Meadows/API Decl. at ¶ 7 (ECF 36-5); Imbergamo/FFRC Decl. at ¶ 4 (ECF 36-6); Beymer/PLC Decl. at ¶ 2 (ECF 36-10).

Nor can Federal Defendants so easily write off the Defendant Intervenors' procedural concerns. See ECF 182 at 13. As the case they rely on explains, "deprivation of a procedural right without some concrete interest that is affected by the deprivation—a procedural right in vacuo—is insufficient to create Article III standing." Summers, 555 U.S. at 496. But the Defendant Intervenors' procedural injuries do not exist "in vacuo." The Court's judicial bypass of the APA's requirements harms the Defendant Intervenors in the real world (as detailed at ECF 171 at 23-28), nullifies their past participation in the rulemaking process (because it vacates a rule adopted by the Services without finding it unlawful), and makes meaningless any future participation (if the Services even go through notice-and-comment to "rescind" the already-vacated rules).

D. A Stay Pending Appeal Serves the Public Interest.

Last, a stay pending appeal also serves the public interest because the public is entitled to participate in notice and comment before a duly enacted regulation is vacated without a determination that the regulation is unlawful. Cf. Perez v. Morg. Bankers Ass'n, 575 U.S. 92, 101 (2015). A stay would also preserve regulatory certainty, rather imposing on the public and regulated entities three sets of rules in a matter of months. As the Federal Defendants recognize, left unabated, the Court's action will "cause confusion among the public, other agencies, and stakeholders, and impede the efficiency of ESA implementation, by abruptly altering the regulatory framework and creating uncertainty about which standards to apply." ECF 146 at 36;

1 see also Nat'l Fam. Farm Coal. v. EPA, 966 F.3d 893, 929 (9th Cir. 2020) (warning of “the 2 disruptive consequences of an interim change that may itself be changed” (quoting *Cal. Cmty.
 3 Against Toxics v. EPA*, 688 F.3d 989, 992 (9th Cir. 2012))).

4 Plaintiffs downplay these concerns by baldly asserting that “denial of the stay would 5 continue the regulatory status quo that was in effect for the past 30 years or more.” ECF 181 at 28.
 6 But that is a remarkable (and false) statement considering that: (1) the 2019 Rules have now been 7 in effect for three years, (2) vacating those rules resurrects the 2016 rules that were also in effect
 8 for three (not thirty) years, and (3) it was the 2019 Rules that restored the Services’ longstanding
 9 two-step approach for designating “critical habitat”—a rule that the Services had used for thirty
 10 years before the 2016 rules charted a new course. See 49 Fed. Reg. 38,900, 38,909 (Oct. 1, 1984)
 11 (previously codified at 50 C.F.R. § 424.12(b)(1-5)), amended by Listing Endangered and 12 Threatened Species and Designating Critical Habitat; Implementing Changes to the Regulation for 13 Designating Critical Habitat, 81 Fed. Reg. 7414 (Feb. 11, 2016). In any event, given that Plaintiffs 14 never sought a preliminary injunction, we are hardly in a “pre-effective date” posture where 15 considerations of “status quo” versus “new practice” is an especially relevant consideration.

16 Plaintiffs also rely on their allegations of environmental harm to argue against a stay. ECF
 17 181 at 28. But Plaintiffs’ allegations are unproven (hence the pre-merits vacatur), and the Services
 18 determined that their 2019 regulations would not harm the environment. E.g., 84 Fed. Reg. 44,753, 19 44,757 (Aug. 27, 2019) (“By meaningfully recognizing the differences in the regulatory 20 framework between endangered species and threatened species, we believe that crafting species-
 21 specific 4(d) rules will incentivize conservation for both endangered species and threatened
 22 species. Private landowners and other stakeholders may see more of an incentive to work on 23 recovery actions for endangered species, with an eventual goal of downlisting to threatened species
 24 status with a species-specific 4(d) rule that might result in reduced regulation.”). Unless and until 25 Plaintiffs can prove their case, the public interest is not served by vacating rules that were lawfully 26 enacted.

III. CONCLUSION

At root, Plaintiffs' and the Federal Defendants' opposition to the Defendant Intervenor's stay motion is a cynical attempt to make this Court's pre-merits vacatur unreviewable. But the Court has made its decision, and the Defendant Intervenor is entitled to seek appellate review so a higher court can resolve the pre-merits vacatur question. To guarantee that such review can occur, the Defendant Intervenor respectfully request that the Court stay its order vacating the challenged Rules pending appeal.

In compliance with Local Rule 5-1, the filer of this document attests that all signatories listed have concurred in the filing of this document.
